Historical/biographical note:

On April 1, 1970, the newly created Alliance to End Repression opened an office with two staff members and the support of close to seventy participating organizations. Approximately fifty of these organizations became Alliance to End Repression affiliates. The organizations participating in the creation of the Alliance to End Repression (hereafter referred to as "the Alliance") ranged from the Amalgamated Meat Cutters union to the Black P. Stone Nation. These supporting organizations included churches and synagogues, trade unions, human relations and community groups "working together to change government practices that threaten civil liberties." In ideology and programs, the Alliance was a microcosm of the social activism of the 1970s: politically liberal or leftist and broadly participatory, opportunistic in choosing issues to investigate, and decentralized as it created and spun-off new organizations focused on particular issues. Affiliate organizations participated only in the initiatives that they wished to support.

Establishment of the Alliance was aided by a loan from the Chicago Committee to Defend the Bill of Rights (CCDBR). Another major contributor to the Alliance was the Northern Illinois Conference of the United Methodist Church. Over the years, the Alliance also received financial support from affiliate fees, religious organizations, individual contributions, fundraising benefits, and federal, foundation and church grants. Former Catholic Priest John Hill and Betty Plank were in charge of the Alliance office.

A council composed of delegates from the affiliate organizations directed the Alliance. It met on the second Tuesday of each month. The council's officers were elected by the council. The Alliance also had a steering committee composed of council officers, staff, task force chairs, and members-at-large elected by council.

The Alliance to End Repression attempted to create an inclusive mass movement. Task forces (sometimes called committees) were formed to carry out the major work of the Alliance. There was also a "freelance" task force: the National Priorities Task Force. The members of these task forces were representatives of affiliated and cooperating organizations. The wide range of issues included the Chicago 15, defense of Angela Davis, repeal of Emergency Detention Laws, defense of the right to bail, and opposition to police repression.

Four of the early task forces became viable independent organizations and significant community forces: the Bail Task Force became the Cook County Special Bail Project; the Prisons Task Force became the Illinois Prisons and Jails Project; the Police-Community Problems Task Force became the "Citizens Alert"; and the Gay Rights Task Force became the Illinois Gay Rights Task Force. Each of these groups eventually possessed full-time coordinators, and, as of 1996, all four continued to exist as separate organizations.

The Bail Task Force succeeded in increasing the number of recognizance bonds in Holiday Court, and the organization grew quickly. At the time of the creation of the Cook County Special Bail Project (CCSBP), there were two hundred volunteers working on bail projects. In 1975, CCSBP possessed a paid staff of five.

The Illinois Prisons and Jails Project (IPPJ) was created in fall 1972 out of the Alliance's Prisons Task Force. It had a five point program: the Citizens Visitation Committee, investigation of prison deaths, a detainee lawsuit, research into probation-subsidy legislation, and the clergy observation team.

In the summer of 1972, the Citizens Alert was created as an adjunct of the Alliance, with one full-time staff member to deal with "police problems" including hiring practices, community relations, and police accountability. By 1978 the Citizens Alert no longer had a paid staff but continued as a small organization.

A central concern of the Alliance throughout its existence was the police and criminal court system. Four related issues were prominent in the early life of the Alliance: political influence on the Cook County Coroner's office, bias by the Chicago Police Board, discriminatory patterns in the granting of bail, and the Chicago Police Red Squad's surveillance of social and political activists.

The Alliance's Task Force on the Special Prosecutor opposed Edward V. Hanrahan after the deaths of Black Panthers Fred Hampton and Mark Clark in a police raid. The Alliance charged that fatal force by the police was often overlooked by the politically appointed Cook County Coroner. Ultimately, the Alliance campaigned to initiate and pass a referendum on the November 1972 ballot that created a publicly-elected Cook County Medical Examiner to supersede the position of Cook County Coroner.

Another early success was the campaign to make the appointment of members of the Chicago Police Board more democratic. Alliance efforts helped change meetings of the Chicago Police Board from a small, sparsely attended conference into a monthly public forum.

From the beginning, founders of the Alliance had considered the possibility of suing the Chicago Police Department to stop political surveillance. By April 1972 such a lawsuit was under active discussion. On November 13, 1974, the lawsuit, "Alliance to End Repression et al. versus James M. Rochford, et al.," No. C 3268, was filed in U.S. District Court. The discovery process in the case included both the files at the Chicago Police and the FBI's Chicago field office.

Evidence of extensive surveillance of political groups by the Chicago Police Department had been found during an investigation by the Afro-American Police League (AAPL) of possibly discriminatory pay practices by the Chicago Police Department. After noticing a mysterious pay code of 099 in the police department's Intelligence Division, the AAPL's lawyers suspected that a number of community and civil rights activists were actually police officers or paid informants.

The Illinois Justice Foundation was created in October 1975 to perform certain tax exempt functions. One of its main goals was to fund the lawsuit. In November 1975, the Alliance's Committee to Support the Red Squad Lawsuit was formed. It was soon renamed the Political Surveillance Committee. The committee had two goals: to publicize the lawsuit and to raise funds. Many other organizations supported the lawsuit. Most were in some way related to the Alliance. Citizens Alert, Illinois Justice Foundation, and the Chicago Police Surveillance Litigation and Education Project were among those groups.

Also, the Chicago office of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) filed its own lawsuit against the Red Squad. These efforts eventually led to a grand jury investigation. The two lawsuits (by the ACLU and by the Alliance) were combined into one trial case.

In 1975, a newspaper column by Mike Royko on January 31 garnered publicity for the lawsuit. In April 1975, Richard Gutman, a lawyer, joined the Citizens Alert project and became involved in the lawsuit. Val Klink, involved with the Alliance since its conception, also became a volunteer attorney for the litigation.

In 1976, two major rulings favored the Alliance's efforts. One was an injunction against further police surveillance outside of specific criminal investigations (challenged all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court), and the other imposed sanctions against the defendants for destruction of documents.

Throughout the existence of the Alliance, funding from affiliate organizations and from grants was uncertain, and the Alliance was often without money. John Hill and Betty Plank often worked for months without being paid. Nevertheless, the Alliance's interests grew very diverse, sometimes with committees changing names and tasks.

For example, the Alliance created the Media Committee in fall 1973, and over the years, it dealt primarily with issues regarding cable television. In late 1975 and early 1976, the Alliance began to develop programs in the areas of juvenile justice and immigration. When the death penalty was reinstated in Illinois, the Alliance helped resurrect the Illinois Coalition Against the Death Penalty. In December 1976, an Iranian student came to speak to the Alliance's council about alleged harassment of Iranian students by SAVAK, the Iranian Secret Police. The Alliance became deeply concerned about this issue.

Because of the intense activity of the Alliance and the controversial nature of many of the issues it embraced, the Alliance received local and national attention from the news and entertainment media. For example, Joan Baez's album "From Every Stage" included an encouragement to join the Alliance printed on the back.

Fame also helped bring the Alliance to the attention of federal authorities. The Alliance was investigated by the Senate Internal Security Committee (SISS). Police infiltrators of the Alliance characterized the organization as a communist front group that was paralyzing the work of the Red Squad.

The Alliance was weakened by the retirements of John Hill and Betty Plank, and in 1976, the retirement of Richard Criley, an original force behind the Alliance. At that time, the Alliance went through a series of leaders. Mary Alice Rankin became associate coordinator of the Alliance in January 1976. Susan Rosenblum became executive coordinator in March 1976. She stayed only until October 18th. Rosenblum succeeded Hill, who had led the Alliance from its creation.

In 1977, Sister Gabriel Herbers became the new executive coordinator. She served until June 1978. Midge Wilson and Elli Elliot became the Alliance staff in September 1978. In 1979, Elliot resigned, and thenceforth, administration of the Alliance ran completely on a volunteer basis due to financial constraints. After Elliot's resignation, Rachel Rosen DeGolia, head of the CCDBR's office, supervised Alliance operations.

In 1981, the Alliance's lawsuit resulted in a court order that barred police surveillance outside of specific criminal investigations. By this time, the Alliance was searching for a tenant to share its office space in order to cut expenses. The organization was winding down. The Alliance's newsletter, Progress Reports, continued into 1983, when the Alliance was renting space in the Old Colony Building with the CCDBR. The Alliance's last records date from 1986.

The Alliance had succeeded in its central project: elimination of political surveillance by the Chicago police. It had also spawned other social activist organizations and advanced many other social goals.

Summary description of the collection:

Correspondence, memos, announcements, meeting minutes, topical files, and constituent organization files of the Chicago-based Alliance to End Repression, a fifty-member consortium of churches, labor unions, human relations and community groups, concerned with issues such as opposition to the death penalty, protection of prisoners' rights, gay rights, constitutional rights, and opposition to police surveillance for political purposes. Includes files on the Alliance's lawsuit, 1974-1981, against the Chicago Police Department's Red Squad, in which the Alliance sought to halt surveillance of persons engaging in leftist political activities rather than crimes. Collection includes many mailings and other materials from similar organizations in Chicago and across the nation.

Description of some material related to the collection:

Related materials at Chicago History Museum, Research Center, include records of the Chicago Committee to Defend the Bill of Rights, Citizens Alert, the Cook County Special Bail Project, the Illinois Coalition Against the Death Penalty, and other organizations that cooperated with the Alliance as well as publications cataloged separately

As a result of the Red Squad lawsuit, a collection known as the "Chicago Police Department Red Squad and related records" was deposited at Chicago History Museum according to a court order issued by Judge Susan Getzendanner in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. The court order imposes restrictions on access and use of the Red Squad files.

In addition there is a small, open collection named "Red Squad Chicago court case collection of open files [manuscript], 1976-1993," that relates to court proceedings.
